

"We're Home... We're Free... But We Can't Believe It Yet!"

A good sign comes as soldiers' emotions are shown in Japan.

In a few minutes, the soldiers will be eating in the dining room of the hotel where they are staying.

Children in the crowd around the soldiers' headquarters in the city of Tokyo.

An American soldier and his Japanese captives in the city of Tokyo.

BY E. ATKINSON TELLS OF JAP. PRISON LIFE

"The Nips Couldn't Break Our Morale"

How the Prisoner of War camps in Japan are being run and the conditions of the men who are held there.

By E. ATKINSON

This is the story of the first five months of my life in a Japanese prison camp.

At 11:30 p.m. I turned the lights out and went to bed.

My first experience in the camp was the Japanese who were friendly. They had no idea of the conditions of the camp.

Through the bars you can see the camp in a way that you never see it before.

When the sun sets, the camp is a very dark place.

There is a small camp in the camp. It is a very small camp.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

This is the camp where the first five months of my life were spent.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

There are five camps in the camp. It is a very small camp.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

This is the camp where the first five months of my life were spent.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

There are five camps in the camp. It is a very small camp.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

This is the camp where the first five months of my life were spent.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

There are five camps in the camp. It is a very small camp.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

This is the camp where the first five months of my life were spent.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

There are five camps in the camp. It is a very small camp.

The camp is a very small camp. It is a very small camp.

